Spotlight on South Africa

Here at Grog we are huge fans of South African wine and have over the years forged close links with some of our favourites. As many of you know our own Handmade Wines were created on a pretty epic trip over a decade ago in partnership with Danie Steytler from Kaapzicht Estate.

South Africa in many ways considers itself 'Old World' as it has been making wines for over three centuries, when in 1652 the Dutch East India Co set up a stopping point in Cape Town. The first wine was produced in 1659 and, despite some troubled periods along the way, they have been making wine ever since. The Dutch were not wine makers by trade, so it took the arrival of the Huguenots in the late 1600s to really start making progress in terms of quality.

Economic conditions, Phylloxera, wars, and even a shortage of oak barrels, have all played a part in creating difficulties over the years. The creation of the government-backed KWV in 1918 which fixed grape prices, encouraged improvements in viticulture and vinification techniques as well as limited yields led to a huge increase in quality of wine and by the 1950s, it was streets ahead of its 'New World' counterparts.

For most of the 20th Century these wines weren't seen outside the country with the exception of "Port" and "sherry" styles, and only when export bans were lifted with the end of Apartheid did they begin to enter the world stage. Having said that, a secret contact in the wine trade once told us that all the great value, flavour-packed Bulgarian wine we drank in the 80s actually came from a little further away!

South Africa's most planted white variety is Chenin Blanc. Originally from the Loire valley in France it suits the climate here brilliantly and can produce anything from easy going daily pluggers to serious, intense, textured wines made from old vines. Our own Hand Made Chenin is a prime example of a brilliant daily drinking wine of character.

Although the most planted red variety in SA is Cabernet Sauvignon, it is Pinotage that has become its signature grape. Created specifically for the climate in 1925 by Abraham Perold, it is a crossing of Pinot Noir and Cinsault; traditionally called Hermitage in South Africa. The result wasn't quite what he expected. Rather than a light, juicy wine it produced a grape that was deep and intense with big tannins, it was also a highly prolific grower. This led to over-production for many years making its name synonymous with low quality, dull wines that quite often were reminiscent of nail polish. A focus on low yields and careful wine making has increased quality over the last couple of decades and you can now find some stunning examples that are intense and bold with flavours of plum, liquorice, chocolate, tobacco, smoke and roiboos with well-integrated tannins.

Many years of drought, a troubled government and now Covid bringing about a ban on domestic sales of alcohol (which for five weeks also included all exports) the industry has been brought to its knees. As many as 80 wineries are expected to close along with the loss of over 18,000 jobs. It is thought that on average, most vineyard workers (generally permanent staff in South Africa unlike other regions) support four family members, making this a particularly dire situation.

50% of all wine produced in South Africa is exported so the best thing we can do to help right now is to buy their wine!

CHAMPAGNE

GOBILLARD

If you know Great Grog, chances are you'll know Gobillard - we've loved selling & drinking Thierry's expertly crafted, reasonably priced cuvées since we started 20 years ago. Located in the Hautvillers, 5 miles from Epernay at the heart of the champagne region, Gobillard is still very much a family owned and operated chateau. Established in 1933 when farmer Gervais Gobillard purchased 2 hectares of vineyards, the passion for wine has been passed through the generations. The family currently have 125 hectares and produce 1.5 million bottles a year. Their vines are planted cheek by jowl with contemporaries such as Dom Perignon, yet their price tag remains meagre considering the fantastic quality.

WHITE

GOBILLARD NV HALF BOTTLE	13.49	12.5
HAUTVILLERS. Miniaturised Tradition...half the size yet all the pleasure of a big bottle
ST THOMAS BRUT NV	21.19	12.5

TAITTINGER

With roots traceable back to 1734, Tatttinger Champagne has been in the Taittinger family since 1932. Their headquarters in Reims are built above amazing 4th century Roman cellars, which still bear evidence of their role in the French resistance during World War 2. One of the best Grande Marques (big brands).
